to the pretty girls who have entered Richmond society this winter.

Jamestowa May Day.

Since its organization in April of 1889, May 13th has always been celebrated by the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities in its annual pilgrimage to Jamestown Island, and in the presentation there of a program commemorative of the first landing of the English settlers at the island on May 12, 1607.

While custom and precedent have caused the members of the association to feel that the day is especially associated with the organization to which they belong, they are quite willing that May 13th should be Virginia Day, provided its celebration be kept at Jamestown, so that each succeeding year may draw closer the bend binding the Commonwealth to its first beginning at the little point of land which has become, in the last few years, the shrine of the American nation.
